Acquisitions

As a small business it is normal operating procedure that employees wear many hats. In day-to-day operations, this type of arrangement can work very well, however the integration of technology during an acquisition can be a tricky endeavor. Not only does an acquisition require the merging of two separate, and sometimes very different, business philosophies, it also means that vital operating systems must be combined so that business can continue to run smoothly. At en-terpret.co we have helped clients navigate through the rough waters of acquisition by lending a hand with the following components:

- Ensure compatibility and integration of systems.
- Technology plan development.
- Telecommunications / data connection development for seamless access.
- Intranet installation.
- Centralized phone systems.
- Integrate resources into a single department.
- Remote access technology.
- Develop a standard process for financial reporting.
- Create departmental accounting.
- Develop forums to encourage information sharing.

Whether you are in the midst of an acquisition or it is planned for the near future, it is crucial to have a solid technology partner to help things continue to move forward as well to help you plan for the future.
